

Privately-educated children earn more than state-educated children with the same grades

What does this mean?

Children educated at private schools continue to enjoy advantages in life long after they leave school. Even when they achieve the same grades at school, then attend the same university, study the same subject and get the same degree, privately educated children earn, on average, 7 per cent more than their state-educated counterparts three and a half years after graduation.